I'm creating a virtual machine in VMWare Fusion, running Windows XP. I'm getting my machine ready for a new virtual machine, but in the VMWare configuration in Windows XP I don't see an option to get the updates for my installed XP (ca. 800 MB). How can I "purge" all previous updates in my XP? A: The way I do this is while the machine is booting up, go to the bottom of your startup menu and choose to "Start Windows Normally", which will boot your machine without the wizard/update site attempting to run. When it's done loading, close all running software (including VMWare) and then run the update manager from the Control Panel. You'll get a popup telling you that you have updates available, but you can choose to wait to download, or click "Download Now". When you finish the update, you can then shut down normally, because you're not installing the updates. A: You can use an uninstaller that will free up all unnecessary files. The woman was stopped and searched at a Barcelona checkpoint after an inspection at a Spanish military airbase found she had a stash of military-style weapons, including grenades. It's unclear whether the woman was armed at the time of her arrest or what she was carrying. A U.S. Marine apparently misheard the instructions of Spanish border control and allowed the woman to board one of their transports. This was what he was told by Spanish border control to board the plane: "The person must push in the circle in the last row and ask the person (at the door) to open for her," [the Marine] said, citing the protocol that guides U.S. military personnel who arrive at Spanish airports, in which non-military personnel ask a member of the military to escort them to their gate. The incident, which all took place outside the T4 facility, was apparently the result of a misunderstanding between the Marines and Spanish border control, who reportedly let the 88-year-old woman board the transport. The report cites one officer from the Spanish military that tried to board the plane to stop the woman from boarding.
