The program comes with an intuitive interface that doesn't require any advanced knowledge or pre-installed knowledge. The interface is similar to what you would find in Norton Antivirus, which has been built for the same purpose as Cryptor - protecting your privacy online. You can set the program to encrypt only one file or all your files without moving them. When it comes to encryption, it will use WinRAR format. In order to create your compressed files, Cryptor uses a lot of CPU and RAM, making it unsuitable for working on laptops. While creating your archive, Cryptor will ask for a password that will be necessary to decrypt the archive. The program has a system tray icon and you can easily access its functionality by a single right click on the icon. To wrap it up, Cryptor may be useful if you want to protect your privacy online and don't mind something a bit bulky and monotone.
