Within the conversation, she casually mentioned that she and her husband were going to add a private color scheme to their wedding. While I was happy to hear that she was getting married, I knew she would need to understand the legal ramifications of adding the private color scheme, to ensure she did not lose her business interests. Having these private color schemes is a lot more interesting than it might initially sound. The couple hired a wedding planner that worked with some of the top interior designers in the area to plan the wedding. It was a beautiful wedding! When the planning was over, the couple hired me to help them incorporate their private color scheme into their wedding. As we explored the idea of the private color scheme, they came to understand that adding one was a two-fold process. First, we needed to understand their legal rights and second, we needed to understand the creative and business ramifications of an interior color scheme that was only available to the couple. It came as no surprise when they told us they wanted a private color scheme for their wedding. What we did come as a surprise was that this particular couple would be utilizing about 17 different colors. I understand that they had a list of colors that they wanted, so they hired a designer to work with them.

I am using atomic increment However this is giving me below error. Error: InvalidDocumentEncodingException: Failed to update document Below is my code snippet. var _experience = ChangeDocument.Builder.Initial(doc); _experience.Field("fee").SetValue(oldFee); _experience.Field("seats").SetValue(oldSeat); _experience.Field("mileage").SetValue(oldMileage); var doc = new ChangeDocument(); doc.Save(); A: Your problem is in the following line: var _experience = ChangeDocument.Builder.Initial(doc); You are creating a new ChangeDocument, overriding it's contents, and then setting the Initial field on that document to initializer. To fix it, make the following change: ChangeDocument _experience = ChangeDocument.Builder.Initial(doc); _experience.Field("fee").SetValue(oldFee); _experience.Field("seats").SetValue(oldSeat); _experience.Field("mileage").SetValue(oldMileage); var doc = new ChangeDocument(); doc.Save(); The approval process to get a product listed on Sourceforge is currently used for the first time: it will take about 20 minutes before the product is listed on Sourceforge.
