Cardlings are an alternative to the usual banknotes and coins in use in the fictional universe of the Lone Wolf: The Web of Intrigue book series. The base unit of monetary value in the books is the cardling. Some cardlings are gold coloured; others range in colour from green to black. In addition to the value, cardlings have extra features such as a serial number (the cardling serial) or a portrait of a cartoon animal or cartoon character on them. The books give the users of cardlings several advantages: only people who are registered to the cardling network are given access to it. A cardling trader can be identified by his or her unique mark on the cardling base. Also, as the cardling is a form of virtual currency, it is not required to be physically exchanged for other goods: although merchants and bankers (such as the Leopard or Wolf) accept value in the form of cardlings, the personal address books of their customers are also capable of storing them. Cardling money issued by various companies have a similar appearance but are not interchangeable, even among traders selling cardlings from the same region, because each company's cardlings have their own serial number and can only be used within that region. During a faction war, cardlings can be used as part of a barter system to between the two sides. The Wolf, in particular, is famous for such a plan during conflict with the Leopard; a significant amount of cardling is traded for Leopard brand gold (often more than needed as the two factions share a common border) as the current government of the Green Region, the largest region, is considered too corrupt to trade cardling for real money. This means that the Leopard has a virtual monopoly on all of the real money supply. History The system for private money was conceived by Yarvi the Crooked as an option for his faction to stand out from other factions in the fictional world of the Lone Wolf books and has been in use ever since. In the back-story of the books, the system was used by Yarvi to pull a slight of hand on the then-current government of the region, corrupt enough to accept Yarvi's currency into their own bank. Instead of going to the bank, all he had to do was issue his official cardling and have his faction's loyalists spend them from their own funds, creating "fake money". This worked because there were no other forms of money – currencies alone

However, this particular incident is to be blamed on peak age group individuals rather than on oil companies themselves. In an online column titled 'Torture of a living, breathing human being' about the horrific incident, Van Le, who lives in Sichuan province, stated: 'One day, a 13-year-old girl from my hometown was caught on video, paraded on the street wearing a pink pair of ballet tutus, and then tied to a fence pole.' This is but the latest example of a PR nightmare the oil industry has been having for years. Pictured is a 13-year-old girl paraded on the street in a pink tutu while tied up to a pole Van Le was writing this in response to the rape and murder of a Belgian girl by Sudanese men who were known to be Muslim 'Her feet were bound and she was doused with gasoline and set on fire. 'The assailants filmed the torture and paraded her on a balcony at a local lake for the entire community to see before dumping her in the lake. 'What shocked the world was that the Canadian government demanded that Sudan withdraw from the search for oil in the area. 'On the night of the murder, the Sudanese government claimed the girl had "committed suicide". That was the first time I watched the video.' This is the first time I've seen or heard of this incident. Was the video made public? Why don't we know anything about it? Then he added: 'I can tell from the video that there were crowds, and I am shocked by the silence of the villagers. 'I am shocked by the silence of the villagers. They are just standing there watching this happen. What are they doing? Why aren't they doing anything?' However, he was not impressed with the Canadian government

Q: can't set MSSQL % by %p= } in QGIS Vector labels tool When I add the % by %p= } by Vector labels tool in Qgis,it show the following message: "Invalid feature type argument.... %p= } to f_geom_type Is this a bug? A: No, it's not a bug. From the QGIS User Manual for shapefiles: In layer editing ...it is possible to set this filter on the Parameters tab: Select an attribute type which includes "%p = \{". For example, if you have commented the field date_notified but want to filter by "%p= error", there is no need to rewrite it. In this case, select the "Error" attribute type. This allows to select a field which includes "error" and "= \{". The shapefile format is a limited subset of your SQLite format shapefiles (i.e. for custom types you cannot write custom values, just add them as part of the database content). [Management of Alzheimer disease: therapeutic pathway according to the Belgian consensus]. Alzheimer disease is the most common form of dementia which affects, at later stages, elderly patients, leading to various forms of cognitive impairment. The prevalence of the disease is expected to rise in the coming years. Alzheimer disease is a progressive process characterised by severe neuropsychiatric symptoms. The aim of the therapeutic policy should be three-fold: care of patient, prevention, and delay of the diagnosis. By being aware of its symptoms, the caregiver will enable to detect the disease before its onset in the organic phase. Based on the data collected at the multidisciplinary meeting convened by the French Alzheimer Association in 2010, the dossiers sent to the French Health Insurance Board showed that only a small proportion of dementia cases were being correctly prescribed antidement
