1. Technical Field The present invention relates to the field of adjustable current valves which can be actuated manually or with an automatic system. It is in particular suitable for use in a building current regulating circuit. It is possible to use such valves in the case of a current flowing in a circuit comprising said current regulating circuit. 2. Description of the Related Art French patent application FR 2 772 638 filed on Oct. 20, 2005 describes such an adjustable current valve which is controlled by a detection device which is itself controlled by a phase-control device in order to open and close the current valve as a function of the current and of the phase of the current. According to this document, the automatic action of the current valve is ensured by detecting a reduction of the current value or a phase-change of the current compared to a reference value. In this case, the action of the detection device is controlled in accordance with the current phase and the level of the current. In order to avoid any overshoot of the current value at the beginning of the action of the current valve, it is a matter of using a precise start-up procedure. In order to achieve such a procedure, the document in question describes a start-up strategy which involves comparing the starting current value of the current regulator (or the current value or the phase-change of this current) with a constant reference value which is obtained by adding a deviation value to the starting current value. In the case of a deviation of the starting current value from this reference value, the action of the start-up circuit is stopped. Once the start-up circuit has finished its action, the current regulator can then be a function of this constant reference value.
