Students are aware that students are capable of higher order thinking skills, which can be accomplished through the use of the 'series' method of.

Q: Why does the first output print garbage? My question is why does the first output print garbage?

#include <stdio.h>
int main() { int a,b,c,d,e,f; a = b = c = d = e = f = 0; printf("%d %d %d %d %d %d %d",&a,&b,&c,&d,&e,&f); return 0; }

Output: -773688960 -773688960 -773688960 -773688960 -773688960 -773688960

A: int a,b,c,d,e,f; This declares f as a local variable. It has no connection to the global f. (Note however, that you can do the above without warning if you add a keyword to the declaration.)

a = b = c = d = e = f = 0; Assign all of those. When you call printf with %d format specifier, the first argument is the address of a single variable; the corresponding argument to the following %d specifier is the type of the variable. The type of the declared f is int.

a = b = c = d = e = f = 0; This assign f to 0. You print the address of f, so the first argument is the address of a variable which is not initialized. In particular, the actual value printed is not 0. The first output parameter of printf is (C11 7.21.6.1): ... The d, e, f, and s parameters of the format shall be pointers to the initial elements of the corresponding types, and neither d nor s shall be a null pointer.
