A: If what you want is inject code, I prefer to use a local function. See below code for an example.

library(purrr)
main_code %>%
  summarise(mean = mean(x, na.rm = TRUE))
return(mean_df) }
df %>%
  mutate(mean_adjusted = x / mean(x, na.rm = TRUE))
return()
