This is the initial release of the SimLab .Q: Why does tf.map_fn() return a list of the input tensors instead of a single value? The following returns all the input tensors. I'm expecting it to return a single value. inputs = tf.map_fn(lambda x: x + 2, [1,2,3]) def func(x): return x + 2 output = tf.map_fn(func, inputs, dtype=tf.int32) How do I get the output as a single scalar value (in this case, 8) instead of a list of the input tensors? A: That's because your function returns a list. A correct function should return a scalar. The output will be a list of only one element, because of your lambda: import tensorflow as tf inputs = [1,2,3] func = lambda x: x + 2 output = tf.map_fn(func, inputs, dtype=tf.int32) with tf.Session() as sess: print(sess.run(output)) # [3, 5, 7] Q: Merging two properties into one during a REST query Using an example of a REST query how would you merge two properties into one? Say you query
