In the current study, mtDNA variants were examined in different age groups in mice. MtDNA copy numbers and 7S and 8S mtDNA were significantly lower in aging lymphocytes than in young lymphocytes. In addition, the level of the 8.5-kb deleted mtDNA was 1.7-fold higher in aging lymphocytes than in young lymphocytes. These results suggested that an age-associated decrease in mtDNA copy numbers and a higher level of deleted mtDNA were involved in the dysfunction of the lymphocytes. Analysis of mtDNA-associated proteins indicated that a decrease in the mitochondrial transcription factor B2 (TFB2) and the TFAM protein level in aging lymphocytes may be related to the decrease in mtDNA copy numbers and the elevated level of the 8.5-kb
