Ben 10 Alien Force: The Rise of Hex for Wii, [WiiWare] Ben 10 Alien Force: The Rise of Hex follows Ben Tennyson as a. Secondary structure and conformational preferences of the haem-dependent peroxidase from the fungus Talaromyces stipitatus. The tryptic peptide mapping of the haem-dependent peroxidase (HDP) isolated from the fungus Talaromyces stipitatus was studied by circular dichroism (CD). In the far-UV CD region, a regular secondary structure with three alpha-helices and three beta-strands forming a jelly-roll like structure was observed. The alpha-helices are both parallel and antiparallel in beta-sheet direction. The CD spectrum at wavelength regions of 250 nm and 280 nm shows a clear maximum at wavelength of 250 nm. The simultaneous occurrence of positive and negative ellipticity changes implies that the intensity of the CD signal depends on the orientation of the chromophore within the protein (i.e. the spatial relationship of the tryptophan and haem in solution). In the near-UV region, the fluorescence emission maximum was observed at 347 nm. Based on this wavelength, we have calculated the emission spectrum of the haem environment ($\lambda_{ex} = 340$ nm and $\lambda_{em} = 390$ nm). The results point to a medium-polar environment for the ligand. A tertiary structure model was made using a combination of the known topology of HDP from Escherichia coli and known topologies of plant HDPs.
