From that, I set the acceleration to 60in/s² in linuxcnc the time goes to 9:14min which makes you think GRBL is using F12. How do I get this to match GRBL's settings? I tried all the settings in linuxcnc. if. Can you please suggest what I am doing wrong here? To use F12, you need to know what your acceleration is. I'm not sure if this is the same for Linuxcnc, but the GRBL is 0.0172 linear. When you set the acceleration to 0.0172, it should report that the acceleration is 0.0172. And I think you can put "*" after the acceleration to make it match whatever your acceleration is. So you might do something like $ sudo linuxcnc -I -V LinuxCNC 0.4.7 Build date: 25 Oct 2018 Build time: 13:12:45 Git revision: 30d9efdadf10fcf97ea530cc1c0334b53e4f0c4f Configure date: 22 Nov 2018 Configure time: 17:03:53 # time to wait for accelerations before enable when angle is not 0 deg minXAccel = 60; minYAccel = 60; # minXAccel = 60; # minYAccel = 60; See also GRBL · LinuxCNC · LinuxCNC · LinuxCNC Reply J June 17, 2018 - 08:07 I've gone to get a new screen which has two small lights. There is a way i can check my current settings, or I can try and set it myself. I am using a revision 12 grbl. LinuxCNC stores accelerations in m/s², and GRBL stores them in g. Since GRBL has a * in its G constant, and LinuxCNC has a minXAccel/minYAccel, GRBL cannot read values that LinuxCNC writes. Reply G June 18, 2018 - 10:03 Do you have any idea how to use a Sony video camera in LinuxCNC? I am trying to configure my mill using this. Reply G June 19, 2018 - 05:55
