pre-treatment. Chitosan was produced from crab shell waste using the alkaline pre-treatment with and without the use of peracetic acid. The effects of homogeneous and heterogeneous addition of peracetic acid on the molecular weight and degree of deacetylation of the chitosan prepared were studied using a gel permeation chromatograph and the 1,1'-diphenyl-1-picrylhydrazyl radical scavenging activity of the chitosan was evaluated. Chitosan obtained from peracetic acid-treated shrimp shells was characterized by a lower molecular weight and a higher deacetylation ratio. It showed a higher antioxidant activity than the one obtained from shrimp shells without peracetic acid pre-treatment. Homogeneous addition of peracetic acid to the shrimpshell-derived chitosan resulted in spherical microspheres, while the incorporation of peracetic acid in the chitosan/water slurry produced irregular-shaped microspheres. The results indicated that the peracetic acid pre-treatment before chitosan production was an effective strategy for producing microspheres with higher antioxidant capacity. Furthermore, the chitosan microspheres showed a high compatibility with chitosanase and chitinase, as well as with lysozyme.)
