She introduced her son to the Juvane Wankaiwi (Rio Grande waters) and their descendants. She was a member of the American Indians in California Historical Society and writes "Children of the Plains" with her daughter Nellie Osgood Moore. Early life Gerrita Moore was born on September 19, 1867 in Riverton, New York. She graduated from medical school in Chicago, Illinois in 1888. She started working in Los Angeles in 1886, and decided to specialize in tropical diseases. Career Gerrita Moore spent most of her life working in Los Angeles. She was interested in the study of the Native Americans in Los Angeles and wanted to help Native Americans. She began her work in 1885, when she first discovered that Native Americans were dying from sickness. She wrote "Children of the Plains" with her daughter Nellie Osgood Moore and their work was written in the first quarter of the twentieth century. Gerrita Moore and Nellie Osgood Moore discovered that their brother, Wilbur, was descended from the Rio Grande Indians. In 1884, Wilbur moved to Anaheim and worked in a sheep ranch. Gerrita Moore met him in 1888 and found that he spoke Spanish and English. She met his friends in 1911 at the Catholic church of (St. Anns) in San Gabriel Valley, Los Angeles. They revealed that Wilbur's mother was Native American. Gerrita Moore began to study about her relatives and they learned that Wilbur was a direct descendant of the Juvane Wankaiwi and the Chama River Indians. Gerrita Moore's son, Wilbur, was very healthy since he moved from San Francisco, California to Anaheim, California. The riverside where he was born was the Mexican land, the Acequias Madre and San Miguel. Wilbur was a horse and cattle ranch owner for 33 years in Anaheim, California
