In addition, it has new features such as: Windows Phone as an iOS controller on vRealize Orchestrator, ability to copy migrated VMs, support for VMware cloud-hosted CSPs and enhanced Azure integration to support auto-provisioning VMs to the cloud. PKS was also upgraded with more integration with the vRealize Suite family, adding direct integration of vRealize Application Management (vRAP) with PKS, the ability to reset passwords for PKS users and new MSSQL integration in PKS. Ability to bring VMware PKS passwords into the vRealize Orchestrator console. VMware Integrated OpenStack (vIO) includes vRealize Orchestrator as a native service for managing Infrastructure-as-a-Service (IaaS) workloads on public clouds. With PKS integration, users can migrate their VMs and PKS credentials, as well as reset their PKS passwords from within the vRealize Orchestrator console. Yes. Virtual vSphere Replication is performed using the vSphere Replication client as a 3rd party agent. VMware Cloud on AWS allows 3rd party agents and clients to establish a secure channel between the VMware Cloud on AWS SDDC and an on-premises vSphere Replication Server. VMware Site Recovery is configured to use two keys to secure the secure channel that's used by the vSphere Replication client to communicate with the on-premises vSphere Replication Server. You must provide the correct key to VMware Site Recovery to enable its secure channel with an on-premises vSphere Replication Server. VMware Site Recovery can also use a self-certified PKI (Public Key Infrastructure) to perform vSphere Replication with an on-premises vSphere Replication server. If you have these capabilities in your on-premises environment, you can enable them. If you have this capability, you must also configure your vSphere Replication client to use the self-certified PKI authentication method. VMware Cloud on AWS enables you to use an existing VMware vCenter Server and/or other vSphere components, such as vSphere Replication. Note that VMware Site Recovery is designed to be fully integrated with the vCenter Server. You can manage an existing vCenter Server with VMware Site Recovery via the vCenter Server appliance. VMware vCenter Server is not designed to be managed by VMware Site Recovery at this time. You can use vCenter Server Appliance as the reference instance for configuration of many VMware Site Recovery services and also as the selected target for deployments. For example, you can use vCenter Server as the reference instance for VMware vCenter Server Replication. 5ec8ef588b
