The culture of Japan and its people is the focus of the textbook as well as the language itself, and as such, it's more suitable for intermediate learners. Genki, on the other hand, also teaches about a wide variety of subjects, as well as cultural and historical ones, in a much more comprehensive and detailed way, with more lessons covering various topics. This is where beginners will benefit the most from. For both series, the textbook is meant to be used with the Nihongo Shokyu Main Textbook. In Genki, the text is accompanied by a workbook while in Minna no Nihongo, lessons are mixed in with the textbook in the form of a series of exercises. Genki is on average slightly longer than Minna no Nihongo with a total of 10 chapters across its 4 volumes, as opposed to the 8 chapters in Minna no Nihongo. This doesn't necessarily mean that Genki is necessarily longer but rather that it covers more topics and more efficiently, with its more in-depth coverage. It is a more appropriate starter textbook for learners who are starting from scratch and need to learn the basics. I have a question, and it is that I need to know the level equivalent to the lessons. I am going to study in Japan and they ask me level before going to see which class I have to go to, they say to use the book Genki 1 and 2 but I have used Minna no Nihongo book and I go for the book 12 and my question is that what do you equivalent it? anybody can help me? thanks Dekiru Nihongo is a vocabulary based on Mimasu - beginner. The method is designed to enable students of Japanese to communicate in this language as quickly as possible. The focus is on the concepts of agreement and verb tense. To do this, students are expected to use a mix of basic Japanese vocabulary and kanji, and practice analysing the grammar structure of verbs using the dictionary. This vocabulary textbook is a complementary resource of the Dekiru Nihongo method level 1. It is completed by: Dekiru Nihongo 1 Main textbook. Dekiru Nihongo is a method designed to enable students of Japanese to communicate in this language as quickly as possible. This vocabulary book uses a practical approach and includes exercises on vocabulary. It comes with an answer key which makes it suitable for self-study. This is why the book is often used by students who wish to strengthen their vocabulary skills although they are not using the Dekiru Nihongo method.

If you study Japanese as a hobby, then I recommend using the term (StudyJapanese) rather than the term (NihongoKa-kute-IPomodden) . The latter tends to be associated with native speakers looking to get a job in Japan, and such people generally study the former to get a job with a company that uses the Japanese language in their business. One thing that Minna no Nihongo and Genki have in common is that they both use actual texts as sample material. They may not be the most engaging texts to look at but they will get you thinking about the actual Japanese language. When learning vocabulary in Minna no Nihongo, use the first level textbook above, or some other of their resources, as a reference for what to learn and what not to learn. That's a great use for a reference book. Both series feature a hardcover, 2nd edition main textbook with a paperback workbook. However, the variety of subjects covered is not the same, as Genki features 35 lessons on 10 different subjects while Minna no Nihongo features 50 lessons on 22 different subjects. Finally, Minna no Nihongo was published in 2002, while Genki was published in 2015. Despite being published much later, Genki is heavier in terms of its subject coverage, as it covers 10 chapters on 10 different subjects and not only four as Minna no Nihongo. The textbook is more difficult but nonetheless has a lot of information within its 4 volumes. Genki also features lessons on everyday activities as well as on cultural and historical topics, such as karaoke, performing arts, sports, and much more. Overall, Genki teaches more subjects than Minna no Nihongo, though the amount of lessons is comparable. This is not necessarily a bad thing since Genki focuses a lot more on specific topics and hence it allows a deeper and more complete coverage. Both series are good for beginners. Minna no Nihongo, however, is more suited for beginners who are already familiar with the language and can grasp its simpler material. For Genki, it is the perfect starter course for learners to make sure they have grasped all the essentials. They would then proceed to Minna no

Nihongo if they really felt they needed a more detailed approach, rather than starting with Genki as a sole and foundational textbook. 5ec8ef588b
