So, will it be worthwhile for most people to upgrade or purchase Lightroom 5? Do some Google search and you will learn that a lot of Lightroom users have already bought it. I have been using Lightroom and Wedding Photo Management since version 3 and this is version 5. Perhaps this is due to the fact that I have used the app in the 5 years. I have even bought all four major updates so that I could continue to get the latest software and have access to all of the new features. It works, my workflow improved and I am happier overall with Lightroom. However I believe that it will benefit even those who have never used it before – at least enough to earn their money back. As long as the bugs are put to a stop, Lightroom 5 should reliably manage your RAW images and display the results as you'd expect them to be. If you are using Lightroom to manage photos from the Fujifilm X-Trans sensor, you may not be very happy with the results. Sometimes, it gets close, sometimes it is good enough and sometimes it is just plain bad. Overall, Lightroom is still a good app and if you use any other RAW converter apart from Adobe's own SilkyPix, you would definitely benefit from it. While the price is fair, I would say that Lightroom 5 is a great buy for those who don't need any other RAW converter and want to be in the SilkyPix family. If you are one of those users, and you have been looking for a new workflow, start using Lightroom 5 and good luck. Fast and economic post-processing solution Adobe Photoshop Lightroom lets you work on any number of RAW images at the same time. Whatever you are doing with a lightroom, so it's a power in post-processing tool. Lightroom has the best implementation of a RAW image editor on the market and has long been a favorite of the industry. No wonder it's been a powerhouse for quite a few years now.
