You can make really cool and professional images with the Adobe Photoshop software, but that does not necessarily mean that it did you a good job. It is not because of lack of knowledge, but rather due to human error or ridiculous feature choices. If you happened to fall in love with the whole Adobe Photoshop Suit and you thought that you need to buy the whole bundle, you are in for a nasty surprise. Not only would that be the best course of action, but you will get the best deal, but you will also gain all of the tools and web apps that you have come to love. Even the App Store or Google Play version of Photoshop CC on your mobile device is quite good, really. But if you look at some of the $15 Apps on the App Store or Google Play, you will see that the application is clearly the same as the one you have and you will not get the whole bundle. It is also not because of the price, but because Adobe has taken the freedom to add some extras that slowly but surely make it worse with every update. Honestly, as a professional photographer, I would greatly appreciate freedom to manage my images on my own terms. That is why I have come to really appreciate the Creative Cloud subscription model. Another great feature that old school users may not immediately enjoy is the integration of photoshop with the browser. This means that you can open a Browser File (*.psb) and not only preview it but also edit it in your browser window without having to open Photoshop. The file is opened in an embedded browser within the app. Adobe also added a new Photoshop-powered image editor for web browsers. It's pretty good but a bit limited in its creative potential. The download is version 1.0, and although it's free, there's no built-in support for seven of the most popular live-streaming sites. The following sites do work: Facebook, Google+, Twitter, Vimeo, and YouTube. The last three sites require Adobe's AIR runtime software. The URL for the download is adobe.ly/ws . Once you save the file, you will need to either manually accept it or have it automatically installed. This is a great feature because you can open a browser file right from the Finder, but most Mac users are not familiar with saving browser files in applications. Upgrading to CS6 will improve the file browser.
